Brief Physical Work Description:

Several old trenches were 'cleaned up' to permit geological examination. This work required minor overburden stripping and bedrock trenching. Most work was done using hand equipment including picks, shovels, crowbars, hammers and chisels. A Pionjar 120 rock drill/breaker ('jackhammer') was used during an attempt to remove a large amphibole specimen. This attempt was unsuccessful. The amphibole was found in a trench recently excavated by mineral collectors. These unknown mineral collectors did not have permission to be on the mining claim and did not compensate the surface rights owner. The amphibole crystal was approximately 3 feet long, 20 inches in diameter and would have weighed over 400 pounds. The amphibole crystal was at the contact of a calcite vein and feldspathic paragneiss. All work was done under the supervision of S. Harper (author). On average 12 hours were worked per person per day except where noted.
